2. In essence, the entire meeting was taken up with further review of the PC Security Guidelines. [redacted] reported that the user-oriented brochure (the first of the publications) had been forwarded to the SECOM for their approval. However, due to late arriving comments, the SECOM felt that the coordination had not been completed, and sent it back to the CSS for completion. Although the Subcommittee felt that the brochure was, in fact, complete, the opportunity was taken to review the "straggler" comments, incorporating useful suggestions. The brochure was reviewed (again) in considerable depth, and further changes made. [redacted] and [redacted] will meet once more with [redacted] to produce the final draft. It will "go to press" after the next review by the membership.

3. It was observed that it would be desirable to have a copy of DCID 1/16 at each of the meetings. Since the document is classified, thus making it difficult most members to carry to the meetings, Ms. [redacted] agreed to make one available at each meeting.
